I disagree with the statement that every university student in Japan should be required to study abroad for at least one semester. Today, many students in Japan can't afford to pay their tuition and are supported by a loan-based scholarship. Forcing such student to study abroad obliges them to take out a further loan. It is also unrealistic for the government to bear the entire cost. This is the first reason I am against the statement. The second reason is that students should be free to choose what they study in university, as in junior high school and high school, students study what the government decides. Some students argue that a liberal course already eats up their time to study their majors. Studying abroad will deprive them of more time they could spend studying what they want to.
